Sleepwalking is a sleep disorder. It is most common in children. When they are asleep, they may walk or do other things without any memory of doing so. Most of sleepwalking lasts not more than one hour. What are the symptoms of sleepwalking? Sleepwalkers may sit up in bed and rub their eyes. They may get out of bed and walk around the room. They may talk clumsily. When you talk to them, they usually will not answer you. To prevent them from getting hurt, we should keep doors and windows closed and locked. This is very important if you live in an apartment. When you find your children sleepwalking, you should gently guide them back to bed. You shouldn't yell to wake them up. You shouldn't shake them. There are no ways to avoid sleepwalking. Most children outgrow sleepwalking. If your children sleepwalk for a long time, talk to your doctor.
