When I was in junior high school, my new deskmate was Mike. In those old poor days, many students took the cheap food to school, including Mike. Mike's dishes were cheap and simple all the time. To our surprise, when he began to eat lunch every time, he always picked out the hair in the food first. It made us think what a dirty mother he had. With time passing by, Mike and I became good friends.

One day, Mike said to me, "Could you come over to my house?" Then I followed him to a poor village. "Mum, my friend comes here." Mike said happily. Then the door opened and an old woman went out. "My son's friend comes here. Let me have a look." She said. She stood there holding the pillar outside the house. She was blind.

I said nothing with tears in my eyes. Though Mike's lunch box was cheap and simple, it was cooked by his blind mother. That was not only the simple lunch, but also his mother's kind love. Even the hair in the food is also his mother's love.
